The use of Health Savings Accounts (HSAs) has grown tremendously in the last ten years. It is estimated that such accounts now have over $42 billion in assets, a 23% increase from last year. The increased popularity is not surprising. While they are primarily used to cover current medical bills, they can also provide retirement benefits. In fact, they are the only savings vehicle of its kind that has triple tax-advantages:

- Contributions into the accounts are tax deductible.
- Earnings grow tax-free.
- Withdrawals used to pay for qualified health care expenditures are tax-free.

Many people overlook HSAs as a retirement-savings vehicle. Left untouched, funds in an HSA can grow tax-free until and during retirement. Saving in an HSA for future medical costs is prudent as health care costs are a major expense in retirement. According to Fidelity, the average 65-year-old couple will pay approximately $280,000 in out-of-pocket costs for health care during retirement. This estimate does not include potential long-term care costs.

The HSA “is the most tax-favored savings vehicle in the tax code” says Leo Acheson, a senior analyst at Morningstar Inc. who wrote a recent report on HSAs. As with a traditional 401(k) or IRA, an HSA allows you to set aside money without paying income taxes on it. Money in HSAs grows tax-free and, if used now—or later—for medical expenses, can be withdrawn tax free. In contrast, with a traditional 401(k) or IRA, income tax is paid on withdrawals.

MAM Recommendation: Because of an HSA's triple tax advantage, we recommend contributing the maximum to both an HSA and 401(k) for those who have them available. Personally, I have been very pleased with the HSA that Joanie and I established in 2009.

Maximum contributions for 2018 are $3,450 for individuals and $6,900 for families, plus an extra $1,000 for those 55 or older. Once you are covered by Medicare, you are no longer eligible to contribute to an HSA (although you can still retain and withdraw from an existing HSA account).

CA Doesn't Recognize HSAs: California does not recognize Health Savings Accounts. Therefore contributions are not tax-deductible and earnings are taxable for CA tax purposes.
